PEONIES

NO hardy perennial is of more permanent value than the Peony. The first cost is the only cost, and they continue to increase in size and value for many years. The foliage is rich and of beautiful deep green color, which renders the plant very ornamental even when out of flower, and few other flowers are so well adapted for interior decoration and none make more massive color effect when planted in a border or in a bed on the lawn. Peonies range in color from cream and pure white through the various shades of pink and red to the deepest purple and maroon, in all possible combinations of tint and form.

They thrive best in a well-drained rich deep loam soil. Any good fertilizer if well incorporated with the soil will do, none is better than rotted cow manure placed below the roots so that the rootlets will not be affected until they have had a good start. Do not allow manure to come in contact with the roots. September is the best month to transplant Peonies, although they can be safely planted later. The prices quoted are for good sized roots, which should bloom the following spring. For extra large clumps double these prices.

IRIS

THE flowers are beautiful in form and wonderful in structure. In colors we find royal-purple and gold, all shades of blue from delicate azure to deepest velvet, cream and snowy-white, violet so dark as to be almost black, shades of fawn and brown, copper and bronze, crimson and rose, ruffled, bordered, penciled and splashed in marvelous designs, some with texture of extreme and exquisite delicacy, gleaming in the sunlight like the tracery of frost, others like heavy satin and velvet.

CULTURE

They will stand more neglect than any flower we know. They delight in hot sunshine and well drained soil. They should not be planted in wet places, as this will cause decay of the rhizomes. During spring and their blooming season they are very appreciative of water, but after their blooming season, during the resting period, they should have a good drying out. They may be planted in early spring, but August and September, their dormant season, is recommended as the better time.

In the description "S" indicates the erect petals or standards; "F" the drooping petals or falls.
